

Where the wine is awful but the nudes are lawful

By KEITH DUNSTAN

THE TRUTH is that before the grand tour the only city in Yugoslavia I could name with confidence was Ljubljana. Ljubljana, "the city of love," is a lovely ancient place, pretty close both to Italy and Austria. They have an annual wine show and, for as long as most of us can remember, Australian wine producers have been sending their wine to Ljubljana.

Looks fine on the bottle Gold Medal Winner at Ljubljana Show.

One year a friend of mine forgot to send his wine to the show. It didn't matter really. He won a gold medal just the same.

Yet, perhaps they were sincere. After tasting much of the wine there, it would be terribly easy to win a gold medal in Ljubljana.

Our original plot was to go to Spain Portugal or maybe even Burgundy. Our travel agent said: "Why not go to Yugoslavia. You've never seen such scenery, and Dubrovnik is a dream."

She was almost right: The Adriatic Coast has the type of scenery, so spectacular, it's almost overdone. It could be the backdrop for an improbable operetta, or maybe the subject of one of those exotic paintings you see in Italian cafes.

There are snow-capped mountains with sheer cliffs that drop straight down to the Reckitt's blue sea. There are long lines of Grimm's fairytale cottages made of stone and on every high spot a church tower with bells.

There are dark pencil pines pointing up to God and neither billboard nor neon for hundreds of kilometres.

The first person we met stepping ashore at Dubrovnik was the white-coated health inspector. He looked at our passports. "I see you have been in Thailand recently. Mmm, a lot of disease there." And he turned up his nose at this non-socialist, royalist nation. "When you get typhoid or cholera report immediately to the nearest hospital and we will treat you at the expense of the State."

"Oh, thank you very much!"

Yes, they are doing everything they can to win the tourist dollar in Yugoslavia. They are busy building

HORIZON/ART BARNES

Dubrovnik harbour is a dream

HORIZON/ART BARNES

Sheer cliffs drop down to a Reckitt's blue sea

GOOD WEEKEND