Herb book is delightful and practical

BOOK

HERBS IN THE GARDEN, by Allen Paterson, Dent, $39.95.

THIS is by far the most satisfying of the innumerable books about herbs and herb gardens (even including Mrs Greive's 'A Modern Herbal') that I have come across; a thoroughly practical book which is a delight to read for its own sake.

Allen Paterson, after experience at Cambridge, Kew and the Chelsea Physic Garden where he was curator, is now director of the Royal Botanical Gardens at Hamilton, Ontario, Canada. For him, the big business in herbal remedies which the Shakers conducted in New York State at about the time the First Fleet reached Sydney is as important a source of information as the well-known writings of the plagiarist Gerard or Culpeper. The author has some knowledge of the still immensely important Chinese pharmacopaeia.

Not that he is advocating amateur use of what he calls the "officinals" — herbs used in medicine. As his title suggests, he is concerned with herbs as garden plants (though there are 20 pages of culinary recipes). Herb gardens, as such, are a modern invention; one might almost say "fad". In earlier days herbs formed a large part of all the plants in every garden, as they still do if your definition of a herb is as wide and well-informed as Paterson's.

The first 140 pages contain history, botany, ecology, practical advice about growing herbs and their storage, designs for herb gardens "from landscape to window box" (and inside too) and the aforementioned recipes. They are enlivened by comments such as "Every gardening writer knows today that it is professional suicide to attempt to describe plants he has never grown, or at least seen" or his approval of Hilaire Belloc's sun dial motto: "I am a sun dial and I make a botch, Of what is done far better by a watch."

The next 170 pages contain an A to Z catalogue of herbs, which every gardener, even those allergic to herb gardens, will find informative and stimulating. There are 40 pages of planting charts and a list of herb gardens worth visiting in Britain. It may be expensive, but it goes into my list of the top 10 gardening books.

Take time and trouble to grow flower seeds

By MARGARET M. MATTHEWS

"To see the world in a grain of sand,
And a heaven in a wild flower,
Hold infinity in the palm of your hand,
And eternity in an hour."

WE ARE required to experience a flight of the imagination similar to that of the 18th Century mystical poet William Blake, when we plant in the earth a minute black speck that will be transformed, in a few short weeks, into a flowering plant.

This miracle of nature is well illustrated by Papaver rhoeus, the scarlet Flinders poppy, which has the smallest of seeds. Watching the transformation from seed to flower is one of the most satisfying aspects of gardening; an activity that has so many creative facets. Growing one's own plants from seeds is rather like making a "real" cake, instead of buying a packet mix from the supermarket. You can go to that same supermarket and buy a tray of healthy seedlings, but don't be surprised if every other garden in your street is displaying the same plants in spring. Why are wholesale nurserymen so unadventurous in the range of flower seedlings they produce? As my teenage grand-daughter would say, "Boring, boring, boring!"

Growing from seed does require some care and knowledge. Only recently have I been able to sow seeds with confidence and be fairly sure of the result. One needs to discover when to sow each particular variety, the temperature needed for germination, the depth to plant and the way to avoid dire diseases such as "damping off". Acquiring this information takes a little time and trouble, but it is easily obtained from books, or from the specialist seedsmen from whom you will probably order your seeds. Imagine the satisfaction you will experience when a friend admires a flower in your garden and you are able to say, your green thumb swelling with pride, "Yes, isn't it lovely? I grew it from a seed."

Seeds, although less expensive than plants, are no longer to be had for a few cents a packet. Like most commodities they have increased in price and the number of seeds per packet has decreased. I find it worthwhile sowing the more expensive seeds individually in Jiffy pots, and then placing over them a plastic cloche or putting them into a small propagator which can be bought quite cheaply. To get the seeds started while it is too cold outside, I put them in a warm room until they germinate and then introduce them to the outside world.

The range of both perennial and annual seeds available from the specialists is wide. Not only can you obtain individual colors instead of mixtures (which often results in a garish clash of color), but plants can be grown in a range of heights and breadths, making landscaping more effective. I am at present raising plants to use as groundcovers for rose beds. I am hoping for a blue, yellow and white carpet under the yellow roses, and a pink, mauve and white covering to complement the old shrub roses, many of which are in these colors.

There can be few gardeners who have not at some time been seduced by a nurseryman's colorful catalogue, or a bright seed packet. But take your fill of the vivid illustrations and purple prose, for when you actually receive the seeds from the suppliers listed below they will probably come in plain packets, so that you will need to get your imagination working again, with or without the help of Blake!

As well as many varieties of seeds of which you may never have heard, Specialty has 23 kinds of petunia, seven of zinnia, and more than a dozen sweet peas. Digger's have a big range, too, including "stakeless carnations" and "hanging geraniums", suitable for baskets. I have not seen the New Gippsland Seed Farm catalogue yet, but am looking forward to it. I suppose, as usual, I will get carried away!

Probably the most important reason of all for growing seeds is to continue preserving as many plants as possible. A browse through old gardening books and catalogues will reveal how many have already been lost.

Growing plants from seed is an activity that can be enjoyed by the elderly and the handicapped as well as by the active gardener. To raise seeds successfully both time and patience are needed, but not a great deal of mobility. Perhaps an organisation for the disabled could start a small nursery specialising in unusual annuals and perennials.

Vita Sackville-West, the English gardener and writer, wrote in 'The Observer' in 1950: "The charm of annuals is their light gaiety, as though they must make the most of their brief lives, to be frivolous and pleasure-giving. They must always be youthful, because they have no time to grow old."

New Gippsland Seed Farm, P.O. Box 1, Sylvan 3795. 737 9560.

In a recent article on perennials, I omitted to mention an additional supplier: The garde Walk Nursery, at 199 New Street, Brighton.

Nature flourishes amid the city's heavy traffic

By ALISON DALRYMPLE

IN SURPRISING ways workaday Melbourne refreshes the senses. Nature flourishes among our network of asphalt and concrete, or is displayed in utilitarian buildings, and our climate bestows a pattern of change through the year.

Traffic snarls and red lights can lead to pleasurable discoveries. I never regret heavy traffic or a mandatory stop at the Punt Road-Alexandra Avenue intersection. The elm on the south-west corner is magnificent in any season. The branches have been thinned, braced and shaped to perfection. The canopy, ready to scatter the seeds, appears to bear green blossom. You need to be waiting for the Clifton Hill bus to appreciate the path under the elm. It is edged by a mixed border of bluebells, forget-me-nots, cinerarias, clivias, bearded irises and arum lilies.

On the other side of the city, traffic traces out the roundabout where the north end of Swanston Street swings into College Crescent. Easing into the slow lane you can admire two imposing Eucalyptus citriodora on the traffic island. Smooth, silver-grey trunks stretch towards a bleached Australian sky. Imagination moves away from urban pollution to dusty inland plains. The other delight this species, the lemon scent of the leaves, escapes you in a car.

Plant fragrance is ephemeral and too often lost to the city-dweller. Seeking strongly perfumed species to compete with chemical emissions, we plant lilac in a corner of the garden, jasmine on the fence, lily-of-the-valley as groundcover and boronia by the patio.

But grow one species by the thousand and you have a different experience. The pervasive, understated fragrance which rises from the slopes of Tesselaar's flower farm at Silvan early in October is unforgettable. It comes from row upon row of misty-hued hyacinths.

Gather enough cut flowers of one family, keep them in a cool, closed place and you will find a perfume you have never noticed. The annual Iris Society show in November is remarkable for the subtle scent emanating from the rainbow-colored blooms displayed in a functional concrete hall.

For visual pleasure, there is nothing better than the Spring Festival held around Show Week at David Jones in Bourke Street, where thousands of flowers make a spectacular picture. Perfect specimens of old favorites — roses, gladioli, carnations, daisies, forget-me-nots and primulas — interspersed with peonies, tulips and magnolias, contrast with exotic orchids, strelitzia and torch ginger. Individually, each pot, vase or hanging basket is artistry in texture, color, line or form. This year my favorite arrangement combined the feathery green and gold flowers of leucodendron with glossy monstera leaves, gold-flecked foliage of Aucuba japonica, trails of ivory and sprigs of wintersweet.

Strangely, it is rain, that most maligned characteristic of Melbourne, which enhances the sight and scent of nature in our city. Rain heightens the fragrance of wattle in August, it saturates the fallen leaves in April making a pungent autumn smell, it glistens on bare branches in June, it washes dust off the hydrangeas in December and it drives us indoors to appreciate our cut flowers.

Five Good Clematis Species

1. C. armandii, 'Apple Blossom', pale pink, spring.
2. C. montana, white or red, spring.
3. C. tangutica, yellow, late-flowering.
4. C. cirrhosa balearica, cream, winter-flowering.
5. C. recta, white shrub, summer.

House of rising discord

We would appoint an official Government Hospitality-General. Now according to my figures two out of three vice-regal representatives always have been retired gentlemen from the armed forces. They have not been trained for a job that amounts to pure public relations.

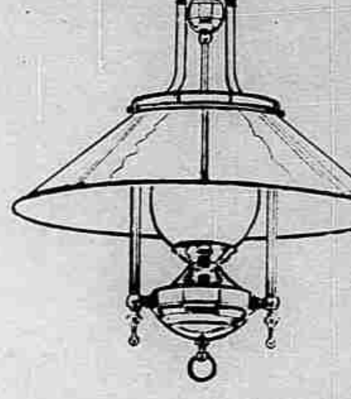

Now we would house our Hospitality-General in a more sensible establishment than the present building. And who would we get? I am open to suggestions.

Barry Humphries would be splendid, although we would ask him to go easy on Sir Les. Bert Newton, always smiling, eternally friendly to everyone — we couldn't go wrong there. Max Gillies; he could fill any role you wish. Leonard Teale I rather like. He is so good at reciting Australian ballads.

All these gentlemen would be very costly. But, look here, we'll keep the Rolls-Royce and the chauffeur. Perhaps we could persuade the Premier to chuck in an old-fashioned Imperial knighthood, just to maintain the relationship with the Brits.

Do you think they would come at it then? — Keith Dunstan

A Letter from Frenchy's...

Frenchy's is NOT going to close for lunch!!; no matter WHAT our Exulted Treasurer does!
If young Paul can bear to drag himself away from the subsidised Parliament House diningroom, we will even hang up his Vycuna coat and mind his expensive clock collection for him while he dines!
(I'm not saying we won't mutter things at him from behind a potted plant) —
BUT — WE WILL REMAIN OPEN FOR LUNCH!!
And open we were Tuesday night when some star spangled people happily enjoyed J-Paul (or Jean-Paul normally)'s Cajun food. (One man who was a little sceptical said "It's the best fish I've ever tasted!")
A great evening!! — Book now for Tuesday 29th — Our next New Orleans night!!
