

thought to have been once owned by the wife of a ship's captain who ran it as a boarding house for gentlefolk. Mrs Joan Pooley and her sons Greg and John who have owned the house and upgraded it over the past eight years, bought it from an elderly woman who lived there with a companion.

No. 17 and No. 23 were the only houses in the terrace to survive the war. The rest were turned into flatettes. No. 17, with a budget youth hotel on one side, is vast, on five levels with five bedrooms, three bathrooms, a spa and sauna, cedar doors, seven working marble fireplaces and has rear lane access with security parking. The agents, L. J. Hooker Ltd of Double Bay, expect it will fetch between $300,000 and $400,000 when it is auctioned on October 1.

No. 21, the only one of the eight houses without a raked front fence, has been converted from flatettes by its present owner, a doctor, to a large house with six bedrooms and two bathrooms. Its seven marble fireplaces are also all intact. The owner, who lives in No. 21 with his young family, also owns the property next door, No. 19.

The asking price, through the agents Carr Brothers Realty Pty Ltd of Double Bay, is $293,000.

You may have a longer wait if you want to live next to Victorian Premier, John Cain, who lives in Magnolia Street, Ivanhoe, on an early Jennings' housing estate.

It is a middle-class location between the Housing Commission area of Heidelberg West and the more superior Eaglemont.

Houses do not change hands very often, a local estate agent said. Some change only once every 10 to 15 years. □

PACKER PEOPLE JOIN EDELSTEN

By ROSANNE ROBERTSON

DR GEOFFREY Edelsten has established a sports marketing company in partnership with Bob Pritchard. Pritchard produced some 35 concerts at the Opera House, including Kamahl, Les Girls and Escapades on Ice before joining Kerry Packer's PBL Marketing in 1982 as a marketing manager.

Last year on a business trip to the US, Bob Pritchard discussed private ownership of a baseball and ice hockey team with the team's owner. He then put the idea of buying the Swans to PBL, which was not interested. Next he bounced it off Jim McKay, who runs Active Marketing, a company which does some work for the Victorian Football League and discussed it with Dr Edelsten, whose acquaintance he said he remade a couple of years ago in a pub. (They first met 20 years ago in Melbourne when Dr Edelsten backed Pritchard's first "disastrous" record, Pretty Girl.)

A month before Dr Edelsten's bid for the Swans was successful, he, Pritchard and an unnamed third party formed their own company: Powerplay International Marketing, which occupies two floors above one of Dr Edelsten's 24-hour medical centres in Sydney's Broadway.

Bob Pritchard: partnership

Pritchard, Powerplay's managing director, said: "PBL is a great sports marketing company but it only looks at sports that are affiliated with the Nine network and that's, at best, a quarter of the market."

Also at Powerplay is former PBL promotions manager Jill Gabrielson.

The Swans will probably only account for about 40 per cent of Powerplay's business.

Dr Edelsten, is negotiating for the basketballing Bankstown Bruins. Powerplay has been engaged to market the team and a research company will discover whether the name is right, as it will for the Swans.

Boasts Pritchard: "We've got a doozey for next year we can't talk about yet, a cycling event, an international tennis tournament in February. Netball is another sport we're looking at closely and a large 18-footer event will be announced shortly."

Soon after the successful Swans bid, BRW suggested that Dr Edelsten bought the team as a marketing ploy for his clinics. Pritchard said: "Geoff doesn't need any marketing." □

WORM FANS ROUT NORM

By KEITH DUNSTAN

THERE IS not a building site in Melbourne that is not sporting Norm graffiti. Wherever the BLF is in action the hoardings are covered with lurid instructions concerning Mr Gallagher. Perhaps their headquarters is Flinders Street Station. Despite the fact this was a Government institution under the protection of Her Majesty, for nigh on a year the Eureka flag flew from the parapets right beside the dome.

For weeks there was a sign right under the clocks demanding freedom for Norm. Nobody bothered to remove it. Then down by the Yarra, directly where the rail people are opening a fancy new restaurant, there is a sign to Norm the martyr comparing the innocence of Norm with the innocence of Ned Kelly.

But perhaps the most vigorous signs are in Collins Street by Nauru House. There we are told: Free Norm. Norm is innocent. Sack Cain. But then the opposing faction has crossed all this out and added: Hang him by the balls.

Indeed the opposing faction has been diligent. The anti-Normers have discovered that with one delightful stroke it is easy to turn an N into a W. So wherever you cast an eye you read: Free Worm and Worm is innocent.

It would be nice if all of us could be freed. Wouldn't it be wonderful if we did not have to read constant propaganda, constant urges to do this, do that?

Wouldn't it be wonderful if the CSIRO could invent a super chemical, a liquid which could erase messages on T-shirts, wipe clean bumper-stickers and just with a quick spray wipe off every message about Norm Gallagher and all other martyrs? □
