

MICHAEL RAYNER

ARTS & SHOWBIZ

Ed Clark: The kid from the tip who got to the top

Antique dealers who can spot a Fox in a flea market are making big money. KEITH DUNSTAN, first, then JOHN SCHAUBLE talk to two dealers who know their Drysdales.

OF COURSE, High Street is quite hideous. An eternity of little shops, telegraph poles and tram wires. Nowhere decent to park. The only building worth looking at is the glorious Town Hall with its graceful clock tower, even better than Government House. Melbourne in the 1880s was dying of typhoid because of wretched sewage disposal. But by God, we had good town halls.

Go back 10 years and High Street, Malvern, was on its way to becoming the antique capital of the world.

Heading out east from Chapel Street